

With extended illness comes medical bills. The cost of care may be paid by Medicare and supplemental health care insurance. Some seniors are unable to afford the high premiums associated with supplemental health insurance and only have coverage through Medicare, which leaves them with out-of-pocket costs for co-pays and deductibles. Sometimes there is no Medicare coverage available for incurred medical expenses. Following the death of a spouse, widows may be chased by debt collectors for outstanding medical bills which they may have no obligation to pay. Our firm can counsel seniors and their families as to how to complete admissions paperwork for hospitals, nursing homes, and assisted living facilities and how to handle outstanding medical debt that has been incurred or may be incurred in the future.